

ABSTRACT

5       A method of screening for agents which are able to inhibit angiogenesis. Such agent have therapeutic application in the treatment of conditions including cancer, macular degeneration and retinopathies. Also included are methods of treating a patient having a pathological condition characterized by an increase in angiogenesis which comprises administering to the patient an agent capable of inhibiting activation of an integrin subunit.